Abstract:

In today's changing digital world, there are many innovations taking place and are applied in all walks of Life. Preservation of digital records has came as a boon to help all the libraries, as many repository software's are available and many have used for their organization for this purposes for easy access and retrieval of digitally stored information in the repository. The article is an observometric study of repository software's used in India. The use of software's for the purpose of the storing digital artifacts and numbers of such digital records stored in various repositories are explored here.

Key words:

Repository, Repository software's, Dspace, E Print, Drupal, Green Stone and Open DOAR

1. Introduction:

In today's changing digital world, there are many innovations taking place in all walks of Life. Preservation of digital records has came as a boon to help all the libraries, as many repository software's are available and many have used for their organization purposes for easy access and retrieval of digitally stored information in the repositories. Digital Repository is defined by scholarly communication glossary as "An online, searchable, web-accessible database containing works of research deposited by scholars. Purpose is both increased access to scholarship and long-term preservation. Digital Repositories are often built to serve a specific institution's community of users, in which cases they are called institutional repositories. There are also discipline-specific digital repositories. Today digital preservation is required to manage and maintain digital information in which ever format they are available. These digital information are managed and in digital formation with Meta-data in original forms. The benefits of the digital technology helping in storing information in a condensed format give a continuous access to all the digital content stored in the repository. It is an Information Systems that store, manage, preserve, and provide access to digital knowledge which serves multiple purposes. Their primary goal is to support scholarly communication and provide open access to articles, dissertations, and research data in case of academic environment. Hence understanding the importance of the which is an online archive used to store digital documents which are available in various format from image, text, books, reports or manuscripts or anything in a digital form.

Definition of Digital Repository

- It is a computer application that allows you to store information and offers different services to the user. Essentially it allows searching and retrieving stored information.
- A collection of items in digital format that can be accessed via an online catalogue. The collection might be collocated on a single server or distributed across numerous locations. The collection may be made available to users within a particular computer network, to registered users or to the public.

2. Need for Digital Repository

In this information technology era one should need the technology aided services in the Libraries which are digital knowledge space (Institutional Repository) of the organization. Hence the importance of such repositories and its importance are as follows:

- ✓ It enables to have easy access to digital content which are scholarly and institutional research materials generated by its organization;
- ✓ Provides access to a range of materials at other institutions worldwide, where your repository forms part of a global system of interoperable repositories;
- ✓ Provide stable long-term archiving of information and research and research output thereby preserving it for the future.
- ✓ IR allows for information to be widely and quickly disseminated so that it achieves the highest impact;
- ✓ Increases the academic reputation organizations;
- ✓ It helps in generating citation of deposited articles.

3. Digital Repertories and Software's for Libraries:

There are many repository software's available for storing retrieving and managing the digital records. Many good open sources, free sharewares and commercial software's are used in many libraries for sake of building there digital knowledge and making them accessible through web to reach the world. Many are liberally licensed to grant users the right to use, copy, study, change, and improve its design through the availability of its source code rather than its cost.

4. Methodology:

An observation survey of repository software's used by many organizations in India is taken for study. The major sources for such study are taken from Open DOAR a directory of open access repository. After studying directory of repository systems used by the various organizations it is seen that 98 organizations have used for the purpose in Open DOAR. Further details of the study are statistically elaborated below:

4.1 Total Repositories Uploaded

It is seen that many organization in India are using the repository and are extensively used for storing all the digital. The Table No.1 shows maximum use organization is Sodhaganga. There are 907307 metadata records fig no.1 and two gives the numerical details of the metadata. The highest no of records (Metadata) are in Shodhaganga is 29% age of total metadata, the second is Krishikosha 19% and third is Indian Academy of Sciences publication of fellows 16%.

4.2 Repository Software's Used in India:

The study also shows that the various repository software's as shown in the table no 2. It is seen that 59 % age uses DSpace and 23% age E-print software is used and there 10% age other types of software's are used.

5. Conclusion:

In today's changing digital world, there are many innovations taking place in all walks of Life. Preservation of digital records has came as a boon to help all the libraries, as many repository software's are available and many have used for their organization purposes for easy access and retrieval of digitally stored information in the repositories. The Observometrics study of Directory of open access repository (OPENDOAR) has given the insight of use of repository and its use. It is observed that the various repositories particularly Dspace and Eprint is more preferred and used software's for the purpose.
